Le français interactif — An vs année, jour vs journée, etc. How to Know Which One to Use?

Who has not been confused over the difference between jour vs journée, soir vs soirée and an vs année? The reasons for using one or the other can be complicated, therefore, I would like to give an easy and straight forward explanation. The idea is to avoid thinking too much about it when speaking to a French person.

In a nutshell, you should use the shorter version: jour, soir and an when you're talking about a number of jours, etc., which means that there will be a number placed in front or after the word. However, when you are adding descriptive words (such as interrogative words, indefinite adjectives or certain prepositions), then you will mainly use the longer version with the suffix "ée" or "née": journée, soirée and année. Let's shine some light on things with examples:

1. Expressing numbers:

–Age

J'ai 30 ans. = I am 30 years old.

Ce bébé a 8 jours. = This baby is 8 days old.

–Time spent

Il est parti pendant 15 jours. = He left for 15 days.

Nous avons terminé notre projet en 5 jours. = We finished our project in 5 days.

J'ai mangé le même gâteau 3 soirs de suite. = I ate the same cake 3 evenings in a row.

–A number of days and years ago

Ils se sont mariés il y a 30 ans. = They got married 30 years ago.

Je suis parti des Etats-Unis il y a 10 jours. = I left the USA 10 days ago.

EXCEPTION: When using ordinals numerals such as first, second, third, etc., you need to add the suffix "née".

C'est ma deuxième année dans mon nouveau poste. = It's my second year in my new job.

2. Using descriptive words, adjectives, prepositions:

First let's clarify a few terms:

demonstrative adjectives = words such as ce, cette, ces (this, these);

Interrogative adjectives = words such as quel, quelle (what), combien (how many);

Prepositions: words such as pour (for), dans (in), avant (before), après (after), etc.

Again, in short, with adjectives in general, you will most of the time use the longer version.

–Descriptive adjectives

Examples:

Aujourd'hui, c'est une belle journée. = Today, it's a beautiful day.

La veille de mon anniversaire a été une mauvaise soirée. = The evening before my birthday was a bad evening.

In these cases, belle and mauvaise are adjectives and they trigger jour to become journée, and soir to become soirée.

NOTE: You've also probably heard Bonne journée et Bonne soirée to say "Have a nice day" and "Have a nice evening"? This is another example of how the adjective bonne calls for the use of "ée" or "née".

Other examples:

L'année prochaine sera une année intéressante. = Next year will be an interesting year.

Je l'ai vu au bar pendant plusieurs soirées. = I saw him at the bar during several evenings.

–Demonstrative adjectives

Examples:

Je vais en Allemagne cette année. = I'm going to Germany this year.

L'année 2015 ? J'ai beaucoup travaillé cette année-là. = The year 2015? I worked a lot that year.

NOTE: At times it is possible to say ce-jour là and quel jour. It really depends on the situation.

Examples:

J'étais vraiment fatigué ce jour-là. = I was really tired that day.

Quel jour pars-tu pour Los Angeles ? = Which day are you leaving for Los Angeles?

–Interrogative adjectives

Examples:

Tu pars pour combien d'années en Afrique ? = You're leaving for how many years in Africa?

Quelle journée as-tu préféré pendant l'atelier ? = Which day did you prefer during the workshop?

NOTE: When quelle is an exclamation, is it also followed by the long form.

Examples:

Quelle belle soirée ! = What a beautiful evening!

Quelle année ! = What a year!

3. Exceptions to remember

A few exceptions are worth remembering because we say and hear them very frequently:

–Frequency

Even though we're not working with a number, when speaking about frequency, we have tendency of also using the shorter version with a masculine word but the longer version with the suffix "ée" or "née" for a feminine word.

Examples:

J'ai travaillé tous les soirs la semaine dernière. = I worked every evening last week.

Je lis un journal français tous les jours. = I read a French newspaper everyday.

Depuis qu'il est arrivé en France, il a changé de travail tous les ans. = Since he arrived in France, he has changed jobs every year.

HOWEVER, we say:

J'ai étudié toute la journée. = I studied all day.

Another example with the masculine/feminine situation in a rather frequency situation:

Une fois par an, je vais à Paris. = One time per year, I go to Paris.

HOWEVER, we say:

Chaque année, je vais à Paris. = Each year, I go to Paris.

–Tonight and last night

Examples:

We say ce soir when referring to "tonight" and hier soir for "last night":

Ce soir je sors ! = tonight I'm going out!

Je voulais aller au cinéma hier soir, mais il pleuvait. = I wanted to go to the movies last night, but it was raining.

The scenario will help you to see how these words can be put into context.

Scenario: Et si on dinait ensemble ce soir ?

Yvan invite Lucie à dîner.	Yvan invites Lucie for dinner.
Yvan : Bonjour Lucie, on se connaît depuis 2 ans maintenant et on n'a jamais diné ensemble. Ça te dirait ?	Yvan: Hello Lucie, we've known each other for 2 years and we've never had dinner together. How about it?
Lucie : Haha, d'accord ! Je suis libre ce soir...	Lucie: Ha ha, OK! I'm free tonight...
Yvan : Super. Il fait tellement beau en ce moment, ce sera une belle soirée en terrasse. Tu veux aller au Bistrot de l'Opéra ?	Yvan: Great. It's so beautiful out now, it will be a nice evening out on a terrace. You want to go to the Bistrot de l'Opéra?
Lucie : Ouais, mais j'y suis déjà allée il y a 4 jours. Et si on allait à la Brasserie Bertrand ? La dernière fois que j'y suis allée ça fait au moins 1 an !	Lucie: Yeah but I already went there 4 days ago. And what if we went to the Brasserie Bertrand? Last time that I went there, it was at least 1 year ago!
Yvan : D'accord mais ça sera la deuxième fois cette semaine pour moi. J'y suis allée avant-hier.	Yvan: OK but that will be the second time for me this week. I went there the day before yesterday.
Lucie : Alors, si on changeait de quartier ? On travaille ici toute la journée, ça ferait du bien de voir autre chose.	Lucie: So, what if we changed districts? We work here all day, it would be nice to see something else.
Yvan : Bonne idée, on pourrait aller vers la rue Mouffetard. C'est touristique mais il y a un restaurant que je voudrais essayer. Il est ouvert depuis 3 mois et il a de super bonnes critiques.	Yvan: Good idea, we could go to Rue Mouffetard. It's touristic but there is a restaurant that I would like to try. It opened 3 months ago and it has great reviews.
Lucie : Chouette ! Je crois que ça fait des années que je ne suis pas allée à la rue Mouffetard ! Ça fera l'occasion.	Lucie: Great! I think it has been years since I have gone to Rue Mouffetard! This will be my opportunity.
Yvan : Je passe te chercher dans la soirée vers 19h ?	Yvan: Should I pick you up this evening around 7:00pm?
Lucie : Ça marche, je suis contente de sortir un peu. J'ai travaillé tous les jours et soirs non-stop !	Lucie: That works, I'm happy to get out a bit. I've been working days and evenings nonstop!
Yvan : Moi aussi, à ce soir !	Yvan: Me too, see you tonight!

(Solutions below)

Le coin des branchés : Plein les bottes

Se tenir droit dans ses bottes = To be self-assured, self-righteous, even when one is wrong.
Lit.: To remain upright in one's boots. This is probably the most common expression using the word botte these days, often to refer to the attitude of a politician, as we can see in this cartoon by the cartoonist Placide published in the French media. In spite of their many demonstrations and expressions of dissatisfaction, the gilets jaunes complain that both president Macron (right) and Prime Minister Edouard Philippe, aren't doing anything for them.

En avoir plein les bottes = To be fed up, to be sick to the back teeth, to have had it up to here.
Lit.: to have your boots full of (something). Ex.: J'en ai plein les bottes de t'entendre rouspéter. = I'm fed up to hear you complain.

Lécher les bottes de quelqu'un = To lick someone's boots: exactly the same meaning in English and French. Ex.: Tu as vu comme il lèche les bottes du patron ? = Have you seen how he licks the boss's boots?

Être à la botte de quelqu'un = To be someone's puppet. Lit.: To be at someone's boot. Such a person may very well have the same habit of licking that person's boots, like above... Ex.: Il est totalement à la botte du patron. = He's totally the boss' puppet.
